

Social networking sites offer great ways to share pictures and news with your friends and family, but they're also great places for identity thieves to find personal information and steal your identity. Many times identity thieves aren't strangers; they have relationships with their victims! It's silly to completely avoid the use of social media for fear of becoming an identity theft victim, but it's a good idea to take precautions to make sure you aren't over-sharing personal information.

Review the following screenshots - based on an actual social media profile - and highlight words, sentences or phrases you think could be used to help an identity thief gain access to Nikki Green's sensitive information.

About Nikki
 I am terribly boring, and a little bit consumed with politics. I'm a daughter to an amazing woman. I have a Boglen Terrier (Boston Terrier + Beagle) named Oreo. I like to read, I like to shop, I like to talk. I absolutely love everything that has to do with the beauty industry. I usually always trust my instincts because they rarely steer me wrong.
